Thursday: Football & Chamber Music

In football, many of the players have the job of preventing the other team from getting near the quarterback, so that the quarterback has plenty of time to see the possible plays, make a decision, and throw or run the football. In chamber music, musicians need to know what others are playing and do their best to enhance it. This can involve softening their own part so that the primary melody is clearly heard. It can sometimes also involve subtly changing the tempo before someone else's hard part, so that the other person can play their part convincingly, making the overall performance much more solid. There are other possibilities here as well.

A wide-angle photograph of a gymnasium filled with students sitting in bleachers. Many students are wearing red t-shirts, some with white text. They appear to be participating in or watching a quiz bowl event. The gymnasium has a high ceiling with a large white rectangular panel containing several recessed lights. The bleachers are arranged in rows, and the students are looking towards the front of the gym. The overall atmosphere is that of a school event.
